

Its a Bird

From Maus and American Splendor to Persepolis and Blankets, graphic novels have emerged as a vital forum for memoirs and semi-autobiographical tales. ITS A BIRD. . . written by Steven T. Seagle (Vertical; Sandman: Mystery Theater) with painted art by European artist Teddy Kristiansen (House of Secrets) is a personal story details one writers attempt to find his missing father, come to terms with his familys legacy of Huntingtons disease, reconcile with his girlfriend, and stave off writers block. If that sounds like a job for Superman, well, thats the problem. The semi-autobiographical Steve Seagle of ITS A BIRD. . . should be celebrating. Hes been offered a plum assignment: the opportunity to write the ongoing Superman comic book. But when his father disappears, Steve is confronted by his familys history of Huntingtons and the possibility that he and his father might have the disease. He is desperate to track down his father and needs to explain to his girlfriend why he might be reluctant to have children. The last thing that he has time for is to put together a proposal for Superman, but his editor keeps calling and needs an answer: can he, will he, write Superman?
