

A World for Our Children

In recent years, life has improved significantly in material terms for many, particularly in the Western world. The global financial crisis has applied a brake to this trend, with the exception of a small minority who continue to receive obscene incomes and accumulate vast wealth. But the crisis is just one symptom of a wider malaise. During the period of prosperity, we have been disrupting the climate and ruining the environment; billions have remained in poverty; tens of thousands of children die unnecessarily each day; our young men and women have been fighting in foreign lands; and human rights abuses have continued. So what is going on? And what's going wrong? And what action needs to be taken? A World for Our Children addresses these questions, in a brief but comprehensive way. It also describes in practical terms what we as individuals can do, if we are to lay the foundations of a secure and caring world for future generations.
