Not illustrated. 1903 Excerpt: ...W. D. Lyman Whitman College Our great king mountain, Rainier-Tacoma, (I use Rainier out of deference to supposed geographical authority and Tacoma by reason of personal preference based upon beauty and fitness) presents many aspects to its reverent observer. To those who beheld it on that long-to-be-remembered Sunday at Longmires Springs, when, after a day and a night of rain, the storm clouds burst asunder and parted like a veil, revealing the stupendous ramparts of ice and towers of rock which on their restless fronts bore stars, the great peak presented an aspect of majesty and mystery sufficient to awe the pigmy human spectator into silence and to suggest such infinite possibilities of elemental power as to make human imagination recoil from any attempt at comprehension or expression. To such of us as reposed upon the glade at Mazama Camp on some one of the calm and cloudless evenings when the cool breath of glaciers was just succeeding the fervid glow of the July sun, while the sweet perfumes of the flowery lawns of Paradise were filling the air, and the untold combinations of colors looked up at us in harmony from every slope, the monarch of the mountains presented an aspect of tranquil and reassuring benignity, and human creatures could draw from all their surroundings the soothing ministrations of natures infinite benevolence. To those again that skirted the precipitous crags and crumbling walls of Gibraltar and looked down at glistening masses of glacial ice, which interlocked with broken splinters of basalt, looked for all the world like the fangs of myriad sharks of colossal proportions waiting to snap at and devour us, the mighty lord of the Cascades assumed an aspect of ferocity and made us tremble with the thought of the pitiless...
