

MERSEYSIDE MOUNTAINEERS & EXPLORERS

I grew up exuberant in body but with a nervy, craving mind. It was wanting something more, something tangible. It sought for reality intensely, always as if it were not there... But you see at once what I do. I climb. John Menlove Edwards 1910-1958 A book about some of the Victorian pioneers, both men and women, of the mountaineering and exploring world, often with no more than a sturdy pair of boots and a woolly jumper, who opened up, climbed, named and classified some of the most famous climbs and routes in the world..and a great many of them were from Merseyside :- The Walker Family, the Littledales, Solly, Colin Kirkus, Menlove Edwards, Bill Tilman and Andrew Sandy Irvine , who all hailed from the Merseyside area feature large in this enthralling book. People that climb, explore, walk and ramble in Britain are greater in number than those who go to watch football matches, and whilst this is a very large number their interests and activities truly follow in the footsteps of a handful of extraordinarily brave, persistent and resourceful men and women. those who went on ahead. It is also a fascinating story of adventure in the fullest sense of the word, exultation and sometimes tragedy, from Tibet to the Tropics, the Killer Mountains of the Himalayas to the no less exciting and exacting hills and mountains of north Wales. For those of us who are NOT experienced climbers or walkers, this book ropes us onto their tracks showing us the dangers and deprivations that were often a part of the whole experience as well as the fantastic rewards and satisfaction of achieving. The author himself expresses his wish that if this book entices the casual reader out into the hills and mountains to experience them for themselves, then it will have more than served its purpose. Perhaps the words of one of these Pioneers sum up what it is all about I grew up exuberant in body but with a nervy, craving mind. It was wanting something more, something tangible. It sought for reality intensely, always as if it were not there...

But you see at once what I do. I climb.
