

Old Aggie (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Old Aggie
Old Aggie. So heres to Old Aggie! Come lads fill the glass
And drain to its dregs the old stein. Come, light the long pipes; draw your chairs closer up
While the curling flames lick up the pine. So heres a cool glass for that site mid the hills
And the meadows so broad and so green; And heres to old Warner and Holyoke and Tom,
With Connecticut flowing between. And here is another for days that are past
With memries that never will fade, When our young love was strong as the wintery wind,
And each was a lusty young blade. Its needless for me to recall every spot
That pictures itself in the smoke, The placid old pond and the bubbling brook,
The elm and the widespreading oak. Each feature is linked to the thread of your life,
Close woven; - the woof of your fate; And new that you calmly look back on your past
You realize your fortune too late. Look well to your smoke that is curling about,
Amid its gray wreaths you will find A memory tender and gracious and soft
Of a dear face now left far behind; Some thread, that is slender and leads you along
Through the pine-covered lane by the hill, And brings back the thought of a sweet yesterday
That sweeps from your heart its cold chill. Youre old, I admit, but so are we all,
Still Aggie is ever as young, As when you were there in your gay cap and gown,
And her praises so blithely you sung. So heres to Old Aggie! Now once again, boys,
A bumper! A toast, if you will! Lets drink to the health, prosperity and wealth
Of that vine-covered spot on the hill, About the Publisher
