

The rapid pace and grand scale of Chinas rise have produced a heady mixture of wonder and consternation in the West. Is China on track to become a superpower? What would that mean for the rest of the world? Economist Hu Angang approaches these questions through analysis of three major dimensions of Chinas rise: its overall economic and social development; advances in education, science, and technology (including alternative energy); and the likely complications posed by resource scarcity, environmental degradation, and climate change. After three decades of unprecedented economic growth, China is now home to the worlds second-largest economy. It is the worlds largest exporter and its second-largest consumer of energy (as well as number one in carbon emissions). Extrapolating from these seismic changes, Hu forecasts that by 2020 China will become a mature, responsible, and attractive superpower that will contribute, alongside the European Union, to the end of the unipolar era dominated by the United States. China in 2020 presents a native Chinese perspective on the challenges and opportunities that Beijing will face as its global footprint expands. Through a meticulous examination of Chinas development trajectory, Hu Angang explains how his nation—as the worlds largest emerging market—will impact global economic growth, foreign direct investment flows, energy consumption, and carbon dioxide emissions. He proposes a comprehensive strategic framework to guide the next stage of Chinas rise, seeking to maximize the countrys positive impact on the world and minimize the negative externalities of its meteoric development.
